Reappointments.

Paymaster Charles H. Smith, reappointed from November 24, 1847, when his former appointment expired.

Paymaster Edmund Kirby, reappointed from August 15, 1848, when his former appointment expired.

Paymaster Benjamin Walker, reappointed from December 17, 1847, when his former appointment expired.

Paymaster Eugene Van Ness, reappointed from December 18, 1847, when his former appointment expired.

Paymaster Lloyd J. Beall, reappointed from September 13, 1848, when his present appointment will expire.

1. The nomination of First Lieut. Joseph A. Huskin, 1st artillery, to be assistant quartermaster, not having been confirmed till August 12, 1848, in consequence of the promotion of Captain Cross to be quartermaster, (on which it depended,) having been laid over for consideration in the Senate, his appointment as assistant quartermaster necessarily dates from August 12, 1848, instead of January 4, 1848, as announced in the Army Register for February, 1848; and he accordingly takes place on the list of assistant quartermasters, next below Captain N. J. T. Dana.

2. Second Lieut. Colville J. Minor, 3d artillery, having died in California, August 17, 1847, (the notification of which was not received at the War Department till January 27, 1848,) his promotion to be first lieutenant, to date from September 8, 1847, announced in 'General Orders', No. 36, of December 4, 1847, is necessarily cancelled.

3. The appointments (announced in 'General Orders,'' No. 37,) of Sergeant Henry Wilson and Corporal Robert Bailey, to be brevet 2d lieutenants in the 1st and 2d regiments of infantry, respectively, to date from June 28, 1848, cancelled—it appearing by returns recently received that the said non-commissioned officers died previous to the date of their appointment. 1. The nomination of First Lieut. Joseph A. Haskin, 1s.

IN SENATE, APRIL 11, 1848.

In Senate, April 11, 1848.

The bill for the adjustment of the California claims being before the Senate for consideration—

Mr. DAYTON said: It is no part of my purpose to discuss the bill that is at present before the Senate; but, connecting itself as it does with the general subject of the war, I purpose availing myself of the opportunity which this bill affords of submitting some general observations on other points. I know full well the disadvantages under which a speaker labors in endeavoring to address the Senate upon the great question under existing circumstances. The remarks that may be made must fall cold on the ear of the Senate, but circumstances of a personal nature make it absolutely essential, if I say aught on this question, that I avail myself of the opportunity of saying it now.

Amid the strife and noise of a conflict, it is at all times difficult for parties to realize their true position. Fortunately for us, the tumult of the contest has for the present ceased. The smoke has cleared away; between the armies of Mexico and the United States an armistice exists. For the first time since the commencement of the war, we have reached a point from which we may calmly survey the past and profitably consider of the future. It is due to us, it is due to the country, that we do so. In May, 1846, war was declared to exist by the act of Mexico. I reed not say that that declaration was wrung, literally wrung, under protest, from this side of the chamber. I then thought, and I now think, that the alternative forced upon us of refusing supplies, or admitting, by way of preamble, the truth of a declaration which we believed to be false, was the exertion of at least an extreme right by a party majority. But, right or wrong, we met the occasion, and supplies m men and money were granted on demand. We protested then, and since we have repeatedly renewed our protest against the origin of the war, while we have furnished means for its prosecution. This has been a principle of action in all countries. I will not ment. It is no new doctrine incorporated into our political creed. It is no jesuitical pretence, no moral obliquity. It is a principle of patriotic action, recogn sed by all statesmen, all patriots, and in all times.

Under these circumstances, the whig party felt it to be its duty to strengthen the arm of the government—to strike, while at the same time it deprecated the consequences of the blow. Now, have we not reached a point in the history of the war when the right of private judgment can vindicate itself? We have before us an enemy, prostrate, wounded, dying; upon his body stanus a colossus, in full armor, unharmed by the contest! I ask again, have we not now attained a point where we may exercise the right of self-judgment? A point at which we may say to the strong, cease to war upon the weak? again, have we not now attained a point where we may exercise the right of self-judgment! A point at which we may say to the strong, cease to war upon the weak? In my opinion we have; and stopping here, what a glotrious result is before us. In a minitary point of view, a foreign war, conducted without a single reverse; in a civil point of view, a peace without a dollar, and without a just equivalent. Well may it be said that a peace made upon the terms offered and accepted amounts to about this: "indemnity for the past" is the hundred millions you have paid; and "security for the future" is the twenty millions you are to pay! The very result which might have been anticipated in the prosecution of such a war. We have now reached a stopping place; some of us have thought it advisable to seize upon the late treaty as the most immediate, most plausible plan of getting rid of the war. But friends have differed among themselves. I should myself have been willing—I should have preferred that political friends had permitted this matter to rest upon their votes; or that, at all events, they should have been satisfied to await the removal of the injunction of secresy before they published to the world the considerations which had influenced their action in secret session. But the senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Webstrea,] whose absence we all sympathise, has thought it needful to promulgate to his and my constituents, the reasons which have influenced him in voting, as he says, against the ratification of the treaty. He "holds," he says: "the conscience of but one man," and he "means to make a clean breast of it." Sir, he is in the exercise of his legal and just rights. But, in "making a clean breast of it," in removing the burden from his own conscience, he has have influenced him in voting, as he says, against the ratification of the treaty. He "holds," he says: "the conscience of but one man," and he "means to make a clean breast of it." Sir, he is in the exercise of his legal and just rights. But, in "making a clean breast of it," in removing the burden from his own conscience, he has unintentionally, I doubt not, imposed the same burden, with the added weight of his own opinions and arguments, upon the consciences of other men. It will be for us to see whether we are able to meet the responsibility which is thus invoked before our constituents.

ments, upon the consciences of other men. It will be see whether we are able to meet the responsibility which is thus invoked before our constituents.

The nembers of the Senate, at least, however it may be with the public, after what has passed in executive session, will not feel surprised that I should assume to see the public after what has passed in executive session, will not feel surprised that I should assume to senator. He should assume the end of controversy. I would that it had ended where it began. I have no wish to obtain the little ephemical reputation which comes from "much talking," or a collision with distinguished antagonists, but whenever an opportunity presents itself, pregnant with great interests to the country, I never have, and never shall shrink from my just responsibilities. I am, for one, prepared to meet the responsibilities. I am, for one, prepared to meet the responsibilities. I am, for one, prepared to meet the responsibilities. I am, for one, prepared to meet the responsibilities. I am, for one, prepared to meet the responsibilities. I am, for one, prepared to meet the responsibilities of the distinguished sentor from Massachaester, read as it has been done the responsibilities of the distinguished sentor from Massachaester, read as it has been done the self-them of the state of the distinguished sentor from Massachaester, read as it has been done the responsibility which that prevent the self-them of the state of the self-them of him or upon any other to show a parallel to such an objection. When have we ever before heard of an objection of this character? The Executive department, in the interim between two Congresses, constitutes a diplomatic agent, as it lawfully may, and sends in as the restriction. Can offer the such a send of the such as the restriction of the such as the restriction of the such as the treaty, make a point as to the authority of the negotiator? I say that the history of this government or that of any other does not furnish an objection of such a character. The constitution prescribes when and how you are at liberty, in connexion with the Executive, to dook into the character and appoint your negotiator. But, after the President exercises his hawful right is the interior of Congress, you cannot raise the objection that the negotiation was without authority, if it have been same time that the such considerable of the negotiation. You cannot raise the objection that the negotiation was without authority, if it have been same time to the negotiation was without authority of the President exercises his hawful right is the interior of Congress. When the history of the President exercises his hawful right is the interior of the president exercises the negotiation of the nego vance, or by assumption of the agent at pect; committed as they doubtless with be still further by terwards, apply here. No man pretends to doubt, indeed, that the President of the United States had the legal, the constitutional, the rightful power to take this paper, whether negotiated without or with authority, and send it to us for ratification. If that be so, the objection comes down simply to this, in the language of the senator, "it is unusual—it is strange." That amounts to but little, and that little, when examined, grows still less. I admit frankly, that the diplomatic history of this coustry, and perhaps that of no other, can furnish a parallel to this egotiator! I admit that no former administration ever thought of sending such a man on such an errand. But, with great respect, I deny that it is an unusual thing for a negotiator to negotiate without authority, or perhaps even against authority. Your diplomatic history, and that of every other nation in the world, is [ul] of instances in which the negotiator, from the necessity of the case, assumed for the time being an authority not delegated, and trusted to the recognition of his government afterwards.

But the senator says that this proceeding is "strange, unusual, without parallel." In answer, I beg to call upon
